The professional spirit

Every year in this space, we highlight any changes in methodology or new wrinkles that have cropped up in how we measure the success of the Top 100 Firms and Regional Leaders.

This year, however, we're going to highlight something that hasn't changed, something that remains a constant — and that is the willingness of so many firms to participate wholeheartedly in these rankings in the first place.

With only a very few exceptions, all the firms listed here are private entities — and all the information they have reported is private. No regulatory mandate requires that they reveal their revenues or their fee splits, and they are certainly not required to share their growth strategies for the year ahead, or the opportunities they're most excited about.

And yet they do, year in and year out, allowing us to compile what we think is one of the most useful collections of information in accounting.

While there is certainly some reputational value to being included in these lists, I think this openness goes well beyond that, to the knowledge that the more each individual accountant and firm shares, the better the profession as a whole becomes. That professional spirit is one of public accounting's greatest strengths, and is well worth reflecting on — and admiring — as you read this year's report.

Here are a few other (much more practical) notes to bear in mind:

▶ The previous year's rankings included in the Top 100 Firms list are NOT the same as those published in last year's report. They are a reranking of the current year's T100 Firms based on the latest information, and include firms that were not part of the list last year.

They are only for comparison purposes, and do not replace the rankings published last year.

▶ Unless otherwise noted, revenue is net revenue. Also, unless noted, revenues, offices and staff are for the U.S. only.

▶ "Total Employees" comprises owners and partners (both equity and nonequity), professionals and all other personnel.

▶ Where two different firms reported equal revenue, the firm with the higher percentage of revenue increase received the higher ranking.

▶ "MAS" stands for "management advisory services" — or consulting and advisory work, as everyone calls it now.

As always, this report wouldn't be possible without our editorial staff; their hard work — and the gracious participation, as noted, of all the firms included here — make it possible to present you with this, the 2023 Class of the Top 100 Firms and Regional Leaders. Enjoy!

A great year all around

BY DANIEL HOOD

With the country only just emerging from a pandemic, while at the same time teetering on the brink of troubling economic times, the results of this year's Top 100 Firms survey are particularly surprising — because they're astonishingly good.

The 100 largest firms in the U.S. reported their strongest growth in almost 25 years, having boosted their combined revenues by 18.55% in 2022 (roughly four times the rate from 2021). You have to go back to 1998 to find rates that high. And that growth is consistent across the Top 100; in the past, it's been common for the billion-dollar firms at the head of the list to report relatively modest numbers, and to weigh down the overall results by their sheer size, but this year the 14 firms in that cohort (up from 10 last year) actually grew by 18.6%, outperforming both of the other cohorts — the 47 firms with between $100 million and $1 billion in revenue, and the 39 with under $100 million. (See Databank, page 8.)

Fully 79 of the Top 100 reported double-digit growth rates (against 56 in last year's report), and of those 79, 27 grew faster than 20%. It wasn't only revenues that expanded, either: Despite the ongoing and ever-worsening war for talent, overall employee numbers grew by more than 12% for every cohort, and averaged 18.88% overall; only three firms reported flat or declining staffing (versus 19 last year). (See the Top 100, page 18.)

A significant portion of that new revenue and of the new staff came from M&A activity, which received a boost from the handful of Top 100 Firms that entered into deals with private equity firms and gained access to large war chests for acquisitions. An unusual number of previous members of the Top 100 merged up and off the list this year, including Aronson, Berdon, Friedman, Marks Paneth, Raich Ende Malter, and Somerset CPAs, while a major new member of the list was created by the merger of BKD and Dixon Hughes Goodman into Forvis. (A similarly major merger between Whitley Penn and Elliott Davis was called off late in 2022.) (See Highlights, page 34.)

All those combinations created space for six new members of the T100: GBQ

many, as the leading firms in accounting have come to understand that they need to consistently pursue growth in a number of different ways, from more deeply engaging staff to leveraging technology, professionalizing their marketing and business development, and, perhaps most important, dedicating themselves to advisory services. (See Firm Strategies, page 10.)

The results of that focus on advisory work, by the way, are clearly on display in the areas where many of the T100 are finding growth, and in their redoubled emphasis on their specialized client niches. (See Niches & Clients, page 14.)

STRONG AT ALL LEVELS

Our Regional Leaders had an outstanding year as well: All 10 geographic regions reported average firm growth rates in the double digits, with three of them outpacing the Top 100 Firms.

And while they were certainly aware of the challenges that face firms of all sizes, the Regional Leaders also see tremendous opportunities ahead — in the massive demand for accounting firm services; in advisory work (like their peers in the T100); in embracing technology; and in the possibility of reimagining the accounting profession both overall and in detail. (See Regional Leaders, page 22.)

It is, of course, a commonplace that the very times when businesses should reimagine themselves — when they have high revenues and commanding market positions — are precisely when they are least likely to want to change, but the Top 100 Firms and the Regional Leaders are fully aware of the challenges they need to address to remain successful; here's hoping that they can use their momentum to make the necessary changes to make sure they keep having years like this. AT

Partners, GHJ, AAFCPAs, Richey May, Sensiba San Filippo and Windes. Most of those were drawn from last year's Firms to Watch list, which filled up again with firms nudging right up against the new threshold for the T100: $50.1 million, up roughly $3 million. (See "Beyond the Top 100," page 6.)

That level of success means that M&A will remain a major part of firms' growth strategies for the coming year, as it has been for much of the past decade — but however major, it will only be one among

BEYOND THE TOP 100: FIRMS TO WATCH

There's a great deal of ferment among the Top 100 Firms, with major mergers jumbling the roster on a regular basis, creating a quick path upward for firms like AAFCPAs, Richey May, GHJ, Sensiba San Filippo and GBQ Partners, which were all on this list last year, and are now among the T100. (Note that the roster includes only firms with flat or positive growth rates, and no firms with Accounting Today revenue estimates.)

Using every tool in the kit

BY DANIEL HOOD

Over the past several years, the Top 100 Firms have been assembling a toolkit of growth strategies that touch on almost every aspect of their practices, from traditional tools like M&A, geographic expansion and cross-selling, to newly emphasized approaches like a strong focus on advisory services and niche specialties, careful management of their client rosters, and placing a higher value on staff recruiting, retention and development — and that’s all without mentioning their investments in technology and innovation, the push for business automation and efficiency, or initiatives around business development and digital marketing.

While in the past it wasn’t uncommon for members of the Top 100 to report one or two of these as their primary growth drivers for the coming year, the trend now is for firms to combine a number of them in complex, interlocking plans. These combinations can range from a mere handful of growth tactics up to using pretty much everything in the toolkit.

THE WHOLE KIT

Cherry Bekaert is a great example of a firm that is using just about every strategy at its disposal. “This year, we rolled out a multiyear strategy called ReimagineX — challenging the firm to reimagine the way we view our solutions (consider solving for X),” said CEO Michelle Thompson, explaining that the strategy is based on three key components, each of which touches on a subset of interrelated strategies:

► Expanding the firm’s reach through the acceleration of its growth plans with a growing range of “digitally driven, industry-aligned solutions” for clients; a broader geographic footprint through M&A; and a role as “best-in-class solutions provider to the middle market”.

► Transforming its business through increased investments in a modernized business model, scalable business infrastructure, productized solutions, and a “people-first mindset”.

► Inspiring their people by offering differentiated experience and career paths, leveraging the attractions of equity ownership to create value earlier, and investing in career development.

Similarly, newly minted billion-dollar firm Forvis (created in 2022 by the combination of Top 100 Firms BKD and Dixon Hughes Goodman) laid out a long, long list, with CEO Tom Watson noting “unmatched client experiences;” a continued emphasis on staffing; greater use of data, automation and digital tools; M&A and greenfield expansion; promoting a firm-wide culture of innovation; growth in advisory services; expansion of the firm’s industry specialty services into underserved geographies; and more.

It isn’t only the largest of the Top 100 that are digging all the way to the bottom of the tool kit, though. “In 2023, Anders is developing a new strategic plan to double in size by 2026,” reported Donna Erbs, a partner and strategic growth at the St. Louis-based firm; that plan includes expanded service lines in advisory; grabbing more market share in current niches; targeted acquisitions; strategic hires; and more.

But not every firm is using every growth tactic; half a dozen or so tools in the kit will see the most use, and we’ll explore them below — but with so many firms trying multiple tactics to grow their revenues, it’s worth bearing in mind that none of the firms mentioned are relying solely on any single one.

EVERYONE’S FAVORITE

Of all the paths to growth, the one most commonly taken by the T100 is the one that leads to advisory services, with their promise of more value delivered to clients at higher price points.

“Warren Averett plans to continue to grow as a full advisory firm. We believe that approaching our work as consultants and advisors — rather than just accountants — positions us for growth in our own capacities, as well as in our ability to meet the specific challenges our clients are facing,” said Mary Elliott, CEO of the Alabama-based firm. “Our focus is to pair our A+ clients with our A+ talent and provide A+ service.”

Translating that broad goal into something specific often involves thinking differently about what a firm is offering clients. “A growth tactic for this year will be providing executive-level consulting to clients,” said Dave Hinnenkamp, CEO of Minnesota-based BerganKDV. “We plan to work with clients to ensure their organization is as ‘healthy’ as possible, meaning that financials are sound and that current strategies are serving the client’s needs and future plans. This consulting effort will go beyond standard B2B interactions and get clients thinking about their entire personal life cycle, instead of just their business life cycle.”

The focus on advisory overlaps with another beloved growth strategy: adding new services and practice offerings. Client accounting/advisory services are by far the most popular service that firms plan to offer or expand in 2023, with transaction advisory, wealth management, and ESG services making the list as well.

“Expanding our services is a key component of our growth strategy for 2023,” said Avani Desai, CEO of Florida-based Schellman. “We plan to do this by identifying areas where we can add value for our customers and then developing new offerings to meet those needs. For example, as privacy regulations become increasingly important in industries such as health care and financial services, we plan to expand our privacy audit practice to include industry-specific solutions. This will enable us to better serve our customers and differentiate ourselves from our competitors.”

Of course, not all new services are purely — or even mostly — advisory in nature. Big Four firm PwC, for instance, plans to help capture growth through global tax opportunities. “Our leading brand and capabilities within both our Trust Solutions and Consulting Solutions segments will continue to help us unlock opportunities to deliver tax and non-tax services to our clients,” said U.S. tax leader and tax consulting leader Ken Kuykendall. “We are uniquely positioned to capture opportunities in the tax compliance market, even as reporting requirements become more complex and globally integrated. By collaborating across the PwC global network we are creating industry-leading standards for tax compliance, integrating our technology and data management investments, and streamlining our delivery model.”

WHO'S PROVIDING THE SERVICES?

New practice offerings require staff to perform the work, and staff shortages have been the No. 1 problem for large accounting firms for several years. That’s why building an engaged workforce is a crucial growth strategy for many of the Top 100.

“Our people are the foundation of our business. Ensuring they feel supported is paramount to our success and continues to be a top priority,” said Julie Boland, the U.S. chair and managing partner at Big Four firm Ernst & Young. “At EY, we’re proud to have made significant investments in our people, including $2 billion in total rewards in areas such as compensation, bonus and recognition programs, and benefits. We’ve also taken a holistic approach to well-being, supporting emotional, physical, financial and social wellness through policy, benefits and actions.”

Increased compensation, frequent and generous bonuses, better work-life balance, a host of new benefits and perks, and a greater reliance on recruiting professionals are just some of the most regularly cited ways the T100 are finding and keeping top talent.

They are also coming to focus more on their staff’s skills, and the type of work they do, particularly where it relates to niche services and advisory work.

“We will continue to encourage and equip team members to develop specialties in specific client areas (whether that’s in a particular service offering like international tax or in a specific client industry such as construction) so that they are able to offer the deepest and most valuable expertise to the unique clients they serve,” said Warren Averett’s Elliott.

And at Milwaukee-based Wipfli, the firm is taking steps to upgrade what staff members do. “We’ve focused on our pricing and growth strategies to make sure associates are performing higher-value work — financially profitable but also more rewarding for them, particularly in tax, audit and accounting service lines where we’re seeing results that exceed our target revenue,” explained growth partner Brian Blaha. “This ‘meaningful work,’ while a phrase that has started to catch fire in the recruiting and retention space, is and always has been core to Wipfli’s growth strategy. Giving employees work that’s interesting and challenging isn’t a new concept, but it has taken on increased value as the supply of labor has tightened and changing work culture is top of mind for every firm.”

While Washington-based Clark Nuber has seen success in recruiting both local and out-of-state talent thanks to creating a new internal recruiter position in 2022, it is also looking to more carefully apply staff to the right kinds of work.

“Monitoring the profession’s pipeline concerns, we launched a more intentional initiative in late 2022 to build out client service coordinator positions to leverage the CPA talent to be more available and focused on technical client service requirements,” said president and CEO Tom Sulewski.

In fact, more and more firms are moving to reimagine where and how they find the people they need. At Baker Tilly, according to principal and chief strategy officer Jacqueline Wiggins, “A broad workforce strategy is gaining traction and includes outsourced, contingent, offshore and insourced resources to lift our talent, support our teams, and maximize client value.”

The hunt for personnel has even become a significant driver of merger activity among the Top 100. “We continue to consider M&A a viable strategy to bring in talent that complements or enhances our firm’s current capabilities, services and industry consult,” explained Wipfli’s Blaha.

LOOKING TO OTHER FIRMS

One of the oldest growth strategies in accounting, merging in or acquiring other businesses — whether they’re CPA firms or, more and more, nonaccounting consultants or specialty firms — remains a major path to expansion.

Few firms know that as well as New York-based Marcum, a perennial acquirer that merged in seven different practices over the course of 2022 alone, including fellow Top 100 Firm Friedman.

“M&A is a very large part of our growth strategy,” explained chairman and CEO Jeff Weiner. “Our approach to M&A has changed significantly over the years, and we have defined what we consider to be a very successful M&A model. ... Our M&A strategy, launched as a response to the recession of 2008, includes three tracks: geographic expansion into new regions, tuck-ins into established geographic regions, and sector-based expansion in our clients' major industry groups."

Weiner noted that the infusion of private equity money into accounting has changed the way deals are done, but says Marcum can stay competitive thanks to its long experience integrating new firms, and its cash flow. The competition is growing, though, from PE-backed members of the T100 like EisnerAmper and Citrin Cooperman, which acquired five firms and 10 firms, respectively, over the course of 2022.

Whether it's a core pillar of their growth strategies or not, many firms made it clear that they're always open to an attractive merger candidate — and why. "SingerLewak is continuously looking for strategic opportunities with regards to geographic growth as well as adding practices which are complementary to our core practice that will bring excellent experience and resources," said Gale Moore, the COO of the California-based firm.

THE REST OF THE TOOL KIT

Next up are a trio of interrelated strategies — technology, automation and innovation — which the Top 100 are employing to operate more efficiently, better serve clients, and empower and elevate staff.

"To better position ourselves to take advantage of the opportunities provided by new technologies, software, apps and tools, we will be announcing the creation of a new division within our firm to be known as YPTC Technology, or YPTC Tech for short," said Heidi Pelczar, the COO of Philadelphia-based Your Part-Time Controller.

"Automation is one of the holy grails of our profession, but in practice it is difficult to do," Pelczar continued. "However, our technology division is already at work on automation. We expect to continue to do important work in this area in 2023."

For some firms, technology is about saving time and money through internal efficiencies; for others it's about improving their employees' lives; for still others, it's about better serving clients — and for some, it's about all three.

A renewed focus on client experience and client service was mentioned as an important element of their growth strategy by a large number of firms. Nebraska-based Lutz, for instance, plans to hire

'We are growing rapidly and our operations need to do more than keep up.'

five full-time client resource associates in 2023. "These employees offer additional assistance to our customers and provide new client onboarding, outstanding file retrieval, tax season process help, extra communication points, and more," explained managing shareholder Mark Duren. "The CRAs also take the administrative burden off of our professionals, allowing them time to focus on the technical work and relationship building."

Others are balancing a focus on client value with a determination to deliver that value to the right clients. "We are focused on right-sizing our client base to ensure we are able to deliver the greatest value to our clients while also ensuring our team has a healthy work-life balance," said Jill Koester, partner-in-charge of administration and HR at Indiana-based Kemper CPA Group. "Offices are establishing new client acceptance criteria and reviewing client lists, implementing fee increases, or culling clients when necessary."

Meanwhile, many among the Top 100 are placing an emphasis on filling their pipeline of prospective clients. "Our firm is expanding our growth department," reported Holthouse Carlin & Van Trigt managing partner Phil Holthouse. "The team, which develops and implements strategic growth marketing, business development and branding initiatives, has doubled in size since 2022 and could grow more based on business needs. Its immediate focus will be enhancing the firm's visibility in the marketplace and collaborating with other firm leaders on employer branding and employee experience initiatives."

Similarly, Ohio-based Hill, Barth & King has added dedicated business development professionals in all the markets where the firm has a presence, according to CEO and managing principal Christopher Allegretti: "In partnership with our marketing team, industry and service line professionals will work to move leads through our sales funnel and ultimately assist with bringing both new clients and additional services to existing clients." He noted that the firm has also implemented a comprehensive new CRM system.

Finally, firms are preparing themselves internally to make sure they can support all the growth these strategies are bound to generate.

"To continue growing our service offerings and meet the evolving needs of our clients, we must scale our own business operations," said Richard Kopelman, CEO and MP of Atlanta-based Aprio. "This ensures the firm is seamlessly able to serve the expanding needs of our clients. We are growing rapidly and our operations need to do more than keep up — we need to outpace change." AT

Seeking sources of growth

BY DANIELLE LEE

Attest services reclaimed their No. 1 position as the practice offering where the most Top 100 Firms experienced growth, dethroning last year's leading service line, client accounting services — but only by a slight margin, as CAS dropped only one slot to the No. 2 spot.

CAS's lofty position is still impressive, with 76% of firms experiencing expansion there. Attest, meanwhile, usurped the top position by remaining steady from last year in its percentage of firms reporting higher demand, at 80%.

What did jump up the rankings this year was state and local taxes, rising four percentage points and three spots on the list to attain the No. 3 position, with 74% of the 85 responding T100 firms experiencing an uptick in business from this offering.

Behind SALT, IT and data security remained rock steady from last year, with its continued 73% keeping it in the No. 4 spot. Business valuations also remained in the same position as last year, at No. 5 with 72%. In a three-way tie at No. 6, with 69% of firms reporting increased demand, were estate/trust/gift planning, industry specializations, and M&A.

Technology consulting stayed in place as the No. 7 niche, while international tax slid down one spot to No. 8, with 65% of firms experiencing positive change, while business intelligence recorded the same percentage as last year, 64%, nudging it down one spot to No. 9. Rounding out this year's top 10 were nonprofit services.

TRADITION AND INNOVATION

While attest services are an area where the Top 100 routinely report growth, it's the innovations to this traditional service line that are responsible for recent boosts in business.

At Atlanta-based Mauldin & Jenkins, for one, the evolution in attest echoes the profession's larger, overall transformation.

"Due to the vast number of technological advances that have emerged over the past several years, we have seen a shift in the way traditional attest services are performed," shared managing partner Hanson Borders. "The industry's expansion beyond conventional accounting needs and the adoption of new technology has provided us with opportunities to broaden the scope of our services and expertise, increase efficiency, and better serve the needs of our clients. Over the last year, we have seen significant growth in our attest practice."

Technological innovation also powers the second-highest-ranked niche, CAS,

'A significant focus of our firm is industry specialization.'

though it also owes its continued popularity to favorable market conditions, according to Matt Long, principal and director of client advisory services at Ohio-based Rea & Associates: "We believe the demand is driven by several factors: Technology continues to improve, making outsourcing accounting functions easier, more efficient, and more automated; the labor market remains competitive and businesses are struggling to find talent to handle their accounting needs; and business owners are focusing on their core business and are more willing to outsource back-office type functions," he said.

Some of these urgent client needs are all too familiar to the accounting firms serving them.

"Clients looking to hire internal accountants and bookkeepers are facing the same talent shortages that we see in the public accounting industry, and they are finding our CAS services to be an attractive alternative to hiring internally," said Ron Halter, partner and director of quality control at Indiana-based Kemper CPA Group, explaining that this can be a double-edged sword. "While this has led to an increase in CAS opportunities in the market, we must evaluate these opportunities to ensure that we are focusing on CAS engagements with our A and B clients and also not overloading our team."

For Rea's CAS offering, sustainability is key, Long explained: "Focusing on specific industries, being intentional in the type of work we take on, and having dedicated personnel are all key drivers for our growth."

IT and data security remained just as crucial a service for clients, as evidenced by the steadily high percentage of firms reporting growth there.

"Our digital services continue to be in high demand," reported Jimmy Buddenberg, principal and digital services practice leader at South Carolina-based Elliott Davis. "Cybersecurity remains top of mind for our customers, while we've also seen significant demand in our new data analytics offering. Additionally, compliance services such as SOC reporting and HITrust are growing at a consistent pace."

Finding new avenues for growth within a specific niche is also a strategy employed at Kentucky-based MCM CPAs, and it has fueled the firm's success in industry specializations.

"A significant focus of our firm is industry specialization, allowing our team members to hone their expertise in specific industries and provide additional value to clients," explained managing partner

Brad Smith. “We are committed to providing integrated solutions, listening to our clients’ challenges, and matching those items with firm resources to assist with their success. We challenge our industry leaders to look for ways to add value within their industry segment beyond traditional assurance, accounting, and tax areas.”

As Armanino helps clients across various verticals outsource their back-office operations, the California-based firm has become more versed in those specialized industries.

“Armanino has designed programs and technology to seamlessly outsource the back-office for law firms, technology startups, professional services firms, cannabis medical producers and private equity-backed businesses,” reported chief growth officer Tom Mescall. “Back-office specialization has been a significant growth area for professional investors in the real estate space, where Armanino provides a full turn-key solution for fund administration. For hospitals and other health care providers, we provide numerous services including revenue and cost management critical to helping the industry. In addition to other services, we also support workforce challenges by being the outsourced solution for accounting, finance, HR and tax, while enabling them to focus on more strategic initiatives to operate more efficiently.”

Industry specializations strengthen all-important client relationships at Kansas-based MarksNelson Advisory, explained managing partner Josh Beck: “Industry specialization empowers our professionals with a deeper understanding of our clients and guides our firm to develop a portfolio of relevant consulting services. The result for MarksNelson is a strong reputation in our chosen markets, which propels profitable growth.”

At San Francisco-based BPM, clients direct how the firm’s fast-growing technology consulting niche can best serve them.

“Our clients are telling us that they need better insight into their financial information,” said Nick Steiner, leader of the advisory practice, of which technology solutions is a part. “They are looking for more than a historical record from their ERP systems. The technologies that we partner with provide real-time dashboards and deeper insights into their business compared to what they are used to. More businesses are relying on sophisticated data in real time than ever before.”

Atlanta-based Aprio reports similar needs from its technology consulting clientele, noting particular growth within their ERP implementation group, process automation and data insights teams, and managed services in cybersecurity.

“We’ve made significant investments in process automation that enables us to deliver higher-quality work faster, and in turn drives better consistency and shortens the timeline to value creation for our clients,” said partner and advisory practice leader Marc Rosenkoetter. “Our clients hire us to see around the corner and help them navigate their next. We’ve aligned our approach to our clients’ desired outcome and measure our success by theirs.”

Meanwhile, international tax and business intelligence remained in-demand niches this year.

“The growth in our international tax and advisory practice is a direct result of perpetual heightened global enforcement initiatives and the nuances of cross-border tax regulations,” explained Michigan-based Doeren Mayhew & Co. shareholder Jeff McCann. “Clients, and prospective clients, are recognizing that the growing complexity of their operations and portfolios require experienced advisors with the depth of resources to assist with not only annual tax compliance requirements, but also tax planning and risk mitigation. During the pandemic, many organizations and individuals had the opportunity to assess their needs and future requirements, thereby creating the impetus to identify advisors whose skills match their needs.”

At California-based Frank, Rimerman & Co., demand for business intelligence is sky high.

“Providing our clients with dashboards and reports that allow them to make strategic business decisions has gained such traction that trying to keep up with their demands has been extremely rewarding and challenging,” shared Tully Middendorp, director and head of the strategic insights practice. “The emergence of AI in data analytics also provides exciting and new opportunities for our clients. While looking at real-time or historical data is important, AI gives us the ability [to] predict what will happen in the future based on our client’s own data trends. As we analyze data, we are also able to help our clients rethink the way they process data. Are their processes supporting or hindering their ability to make decisions with their data? Arguably, their data is equally as valuable as the products/services they are selling.”

MINOR MOVEMENTS

In terms of the categories of clients that the 2023 Top 100 Firms gained more business from, midsized businesses and real estate swapped places at the top of the list, with midsized businesses achieving the No. 1 spot, with 83% of the T100 adding this type of clientele, while real estate dropped to a still-very-high 80%.

Below that, the third and fourth spots also switched rankings from last year, with manufacturing at No. 3 with 77% of the T100 working with more clients in that industry, and technology dropping eight full percentage points to 70%.

The next few ranking categories also all slipped in percentage points from the previous year: at No. 5, professional services remained static in ranking but dropped four percentage points; and individuals decreased by six percentage points and fell one spot, tying nonprofits, which remained at No. 6 but lost a percentage point.

Coupled up at the No. 7 ranking are two categories with opposing trajectories — while large businesses gained four percentage points to keep it locked in that spot, construction took a tumble of 10 percentage points and two slots from last year. Health care facilities took an even bigger double-digit drop, of 12 percentage points and two rankings, with 56% of firms growing in that sector.

At No. 9, wholesale distributors gained both a percentage point and one spot in the ranking, while No. 10-ranked hotels and restaurants’ decrease of five percentage points pulled it down two spots, with half of the T100 respondents experiencing an expansion in that area.

Elliott Davis’ growth in this year’s No. 2 category, real estate, is due to the firm’s “deep focus” on industry specialization, reported shareholder and real estate specialty group leader Bobbi Jo Lazarus. “Fully immersing our team into the industry, often holding executive level positions with the trade organizations in our markets, has allowed us to better align our services to what our customers value,” she said. “Focusing on our customers beyond just the compliance work allows us to better identify and assist in achieving their strategic goals through a proactive, innovative and future-oriented service approach. The market is always changing, creating opportunities for us to pivot alongside our customers.”

New York City-based Eisner Advisory Group helps its burgeoning real estate client base make valuable connections and prepare for these inevitable market shifts, explained Lisa Knee, tax partner and national leader of the real estate practice and the national real estate private equity group. “Beyond traditional accounting and tax services, we have grown our real estate fund and fund administration practices, property accounting, REIT, real estate tax consulting, outsourcing and advisory practices to truly offer clients throughout the sector solutions that work for their business,” she added.

MCM CPAs identified one particular reason for added business from the firm’s real estate clients. “One driver of growth in our real estate industry has been the creation of the Midwest Opportunity Zone Forum, providing advice, planning support, and Opportunity Zone structure to businesses in our tri-state area,” shared managing partner Brad Smith, explaining the industry is not without obstacles, though they often present opportunities.

“The ability to adapt to new legislation is always a challenge at first, as our real estate service team experienced with the Inflation Reduction Act of 2022, expanding commercial property incentives in for-profit and not-for-profit spaces,” he continued. “The not-for-profit direct pay program, pursuant to the IRA, has offered major opportunities by assisting nonprofit clients with the ability to pursue this new cash flow stream.”

Enough of the Top 100 reported an increase in manufacturing clients to nudge the category up a few percentage points, though BPM experienced an even bigger expansion.

“With respect to manufacturing and distribution, BPM has grown enormously in the past 24 months, nearly doubling in size,” shared partner and consumer business leader Ryan Musser. “We’ve been able to provide skilled teams for assurance, tax and advisory services who specialize in this space and who provide a lot of value to customers given this focus and expertise.”

Construction remained a successful client base for Rea & Associates, especially when coupled with the firm’s work in the real estate industry.

“Our growth in the construction and real estate industry is part of a long-term, concerted effort to build out our capabilities to serve these industries,” explained regional president and director of construction and real estate services Doug Houser. “We have people that are passionate about construction and real estate and what it means in the communities that we serve. Construction and real estate businesses are the epitome of being relationship-driven — after all, there is often significant collaboration involved in each project or development. In this industry vertical, we can cultivate our expertise and relationships to provide better solutions for our clients.”

And while not as many of the T100 Firms reported growth among technology clients as did last year, it still attained an overall No. 4 spot. At CLA, deep expertise was the winning strategy for the firm’s booming vertical.

“Our growth in outsourcing services as well as with clients in the technology industry stems from our market strategy of providing services through industry specialization,” explained chief seamless officer Nancy Brown. “Our dedicated industry professionals possess an uncommon understanding of the field, providing clients with knowledgeable, practical guidance. They immerse themselves in the industries we serve, supported by highly skilled technical service professionals. We use our depth of industry knowledge to continuously adapt to our clients’ needs, shaping our services to meet the demands of each specific industry. And our service capabilities are embedded within each industry group, positioning us as a key business advisor to our clients.”

CLA’s increased private equity and acquisition activity also helped, Brown said: “This trend has created opportunities for our clients to grow domestically into multistates and internationally. Our ability to scale from pre-revenue startups to large PE-backed organizations shows that a client won’t ‘outgrow’ CLA — we can be with them on their journey from startup to exit.”

Armanino’s headquarters just outside of Silicon Valley led the firm to naturally build a strong base of technology clients, explained partner and technology industry and emerging growth practice leader Matthew Chavez, but the firm has also successfully homed in on these diverse client needs.

“Over time, our focus on dedicating resources and foresight to the tech industry specifically has allowed us to achieve significant growth as we serve this sector and are focused on addressing the mindset, challenges and goals specific to those living in these industries every day,” he elaborated. “We make it our purpose to help clients achieve their goals and get where they want to be — whether that’s a startup wanting to bring their product to market or an emerging tech firm experiencing rapid growth, up to a unicorn or public company facing the rigor and requirements of their size on a large scale.” AT

Opportunities everywhere

BY DANIEL HOOD

Like their peers among the Top 100 Firms, the members of our Regional Leaders rankings had a great year in 2022 — and they see opportunities for more of the same ahead.

Every single one of our 10 regions reported average firm growth rates in the double-digits; the Southeast took the lead at 20.5%, and even the lowest, in the Capital Region, was a very respectable 10.52%.

What's more, the 2023 Regional Leaders see plenty of potential for the future to be just as bright, if not brighter. While they're alive to the challenges facing the profession — from the shortage of staff and the fast pace of regulatory change, to the complexities of technology and the multiple threats to the economic environment — they also see a host of reasons to believe that accounting firms can thrive in the coming months

To start, people need accountants more than ever.

As Abe Leis, managing partner of Wisconsin's Hawkins Ash CPAs, put it simply, "Demand for services is unbelievable."

Whether from businesses looking to capitalize on the country's gradual emergence from the COVID pandemic, or others looking to navigate what looks like a difficult economy, J. Del Walker, chief growth officer at Houston-based PKF Texas, sees potential in "the ability to fully capitalize on the 'pent-up' services opportunities within our current clients and prospects. We see most of these being from advisory work and nontraditional services. However, there are also 'pent-up' client service opportunities for firms who can successfully win the battle for talent in their market. ... These clients have never said to us, 'You are overserving us.'"

"With the current economic conditions, inflation, higher interest rates, unstable markets, etc., there will be a greater demand for having an accounting firm that is a trusted advisor," explained Greg Crochet, a director at Houston's EEPB. "One willing and capable to provide advisor services throughout the year, not just at compliance deadlines."

Economic conditions and client need may drive demand, but there are also important factors holding down supply, a number of Regional Leaders noted.

"There's a limited supply of good accountants, and many are retiring each year, so firms have a great opportunity to increase their market share over the coming years," said Philip Erickson, co-managing partner of Colorado-based Erickson Brown & Kloster.

"We are seeing a wave of long-established CPA practices looking to exit the industry, which creates significant growth opportunities for our firm," echoed Jeffrey Taraboulos, managing partner of KSDT CPA in Miami.

Some firms see a further bonus in the current imbalance of supply and demand — it gives them more leverage in their client relationships.

"The growth in demand for services will allow us to increase rates for services and to be more selective in accepting clients that fit our ideal client profile. This also gives us an opportunity to cull lower quality clients," said Rachael McGrew, business development director at Arkansas-based Landmark CPAs.

Greater control of the client roster also appealed to Alabama-based BMSS. "With staffing issues and the fast-paced movement of the business world, there is opportunity to be selective about who we retain and gain client-wise," explained chief practice officer John Shank. "Scarcity of resources provides us the opportunity to charge premium rates for the exceptional services which we provide to clients."

ALL IN FOR ADVISORY

Many of this year's Regional Leaders agreed that there was tremendous opportunity in the heightened demand for CPA firm services — but still more saw potential in a shift in focus.

"The biggest opportunity for accounting firms today is to offer advisory services for their current client base at a time when their clients need them most," said Jill Shaw, MP of Heinfeld, Meech & Co. in Arizona. "Clients are struggling to hire and retain experienced personnel, and accounting firms are well-poised to provide support and fill in gaps."

"With business leaders spread thin overseeing operational, financial, risk and strategic objectives, accounting firms have the best opportunity to provide key consulting and advisory services," agreed Jackie Cardello, president and managing partner of Maryland-based GRF CPAs. "Clients need a 'one-stop-shop' for their accounting and financial needs, and accounting firms are well-positioned to provide robust consulting services that make clients' lives easier."

While many accounting firms thrived during the pandemic by helping clients with compliance-type services like those surrounding the Paycheck Protection Program and the Employee Retention Credit, the current opportunity is very different.

"Our clients' businesses are becoming more sophisticated, and they expect more from their CPAs," explained Suzanne Forbes, MP of Florida-based James Moore & Co. "Accounting firms need to go beyond filing tax returns and preparing audits and develop a relationship with clients that's based on trust and understanding. A firm that can bring a multidisciplinary skill set and establish this trusted advisor relationship with clients will succeed and prosper."

Besides their reputation as clients' most trusted advisors and their wide-ranging business expertise, accountants bring another important characteristic to this opportunity: similar experience.

"Many accounting firms are encountering the same challenges as their middle-market clients, including how to drive automation, improve processes, and get better real-time visibility into business trends," said Chris Meshginpoosh, managing director of Pennsylvania's Kreisler Miller. "As a result, firms are in a great position to help their clients address these same issues in their businesses."

When it comes to specific advisory services, some among the Regional Leaders noted wealth management and transaction advisory as important areas, but far more shared an enthusiasm for client accounting/advisory services — it was by far the most commonly mentioned high-potential offering.

THE DIGITAL FUTURE

Alongside high demand for accounting services and the potential for high-value advisory services, this year's Regional Leaders are excited about the multiple ways technology is impacting the field.

"Industrywide, the most significant opportunity would be capitalizing on new technologies," Lee Ann Collins, managing member of Dallas-based Lane Gorman Trubitt. "The advances in AI and other forward-looking platforms are going to create efficiencies in the work that accountants do that will allow us to serve clients faster and better."

What's more, she said, enhanced technology will enable accountants to transition to a truly advisory role, and, on a smaller scale, help them unify disparate systems within their firms to simplify their internal functions.

Technology-enabled efficiency was top of mind for Heather Perry, managing member of Indiana-based Dauby O'Connor & Zaleski: "The biggest opportunity we see for accounting firms in the future is determining how to effectively utilize artificial intelligence and automation to streamline certain tasks which will reduce time to complete attest and tax return engagements as well as reduce errors," she said. "This will allow accountants more time to focus on core services, decision-making, and value to our clients."

And Fina Salvo, director of marketing

'Those that adapt to the pace of change and stay ahead will be extremely successful.'

at Boyer & Ritter in Pennsylvania, was quick to reassure those who worry about disintermediation: "Rather than displacing the role of accounting professionals, advancements in accounting technology may be making our professionals even more valuable," she said. "Accountants and firms that embrace technology are seeing improvements in time management, productivity, accuracy and security."

At the start of the pandemic, the immediate need to keep firms operating forced the profession to make several years' worth of technological adaptation into a very short period of time, and turned remote work into a reality — a reality whose full benefits firms have yet to reap.

"We have opportunities with prospects beyond just the brick-and-mortar office locations with the wide acceptance of remote work and, more importantly, remote engagements," said Ken Wolfe, president and managing principal at Pennsylvania-based Brown Schultz Sheridan & Fritz: "It's both an opportunity for expansion but also a caution to make sure that you are focusing on your own client base because your competition has also significantly increased."

REIMAGINING ACCOUNTING

With revenues and growth rates high, and demand as strong as ever, some of our Regional Leaders saw 2023 as a great time to rethink many aspects of the field, and what it means to be an accountant.

"There are unprecedented challenges facing our industry," said David Levine, MP of Chicago's Topel Forman. "However, with challenges come opportunities. The biggest opportunity for accounting firms is reimagining how public accounting firms work." He laid out a roadmap that includes reduced working hours in busy season, more flexibility, remote work, adding capacity, gaining efficiencies through technology and process improvement, increased compensation, investments in personal and professional development, and strong firm cultures — all with the goal of drawing top talent into the profession.

"Accounting firms have several opportunities in the current environment post-pandemic," explained Mark Erickson, MP of Salt Lake City-based Tanner. "With a long-established model of hiring and promoting through the ranks, the firm structure is ripe for disruption. With work-at-home options and changing values around work-life integration, accounting firms have an opportunity to create a more customized career path for employees' changing and varied needs. With less people graduating from and going into public accounting, firms are going to need to be disruptive in their hiring and retention processes. A one-size- or one-path-to-partner-fits-all approach will not be sustainable in the long term.”

The region sent a member up to the Top 100, with AAFCPAs joining the nationwide list of the largest firms, and managed to boost its average firm growth rate, but remained in the bottom half of regional performers, without a single firm reporting growth over 20%.

Brian Fischer, operations manager at San Francisco-based Realize CPA, noted a very timely opportunity: “With the current economic uncertainties and rash of layoffs particularly in the tech sector, I think that now is a particularly great time to market the stability and benefits of a career in accounting.”

And James Moore & Co.’s Forbes suggested looking beyond the accounting profession for talent. “Prospects considering a career switch, or who offer expertise a firm doesn’t have, can create new service possibilities,” she said. “Having a global workforce — one that reflects today’s economy as the world figuratively shrinks — will better serve clients and create even more opportunities.”

BEST DAYS AHEAD

With so many different areas of potential, it seems safe to say that the 2023 Regional Leaders see good things in store — always remembering, of course, that it’s up to firms to make the most of their chances.

“The biggest opportunity I see currently is the pace of change within the profession,” said John Whybrew, managing partner of Alexander Thompson Arnold in Tennessee. “Those that adapt to the pace and stay ahead will be extremely successful as the markets shift.”

The pace of change is only going to increase, and the possibilities can only grow — which may explain why, for Allen Carroll, CEO and MP of Alabama-based Wilkins Miller, the real opportunity is accounting firms themselves.

“I believe accounting firms today present a great business opportunity for our young, entrepreneurial staff,” he explained. “We need to do a better job of showing them the business opportunity and how bright the future is today for those willing to make a career in the profession and become leaders and owners of a business.” AT

Top Firms: Capital Region

Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Washington, D.C., and West Virginia

Total revenue: $850.81 million

Average firm growth: 10.52%

One of the few parts of the country to report a lower average firm growth rate than last year (though only by a few tenths of a percentage point), the Capital Region also suffered in terms of revenue, in part thanks to the merger out of former members like Aronson and E. Cohen & Co., which were snatched up by T100 Firms.

Top Firms: The Southeast

Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee

Total revenue: $1,971.13 million Average firm growth: 20.5%

The Southeast had the highest average firm growth rate for this year, up 8 percentage points from last year. The big news here, however, was the absence of perennial list-topper Dixon Hughes Goodman, which merged off the list when it combined last year with the Midwest Region's BKD to form Forvis.

Where the money is

Combined 2022 revenues, in millions of dollars by region

Top Firms: The Great Lakes

Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin

Total revenue: $4,099.18 million Average firm growth: 16.59%

The second-largest region in terms of revenue, the Great Lakes added more than $500 million in 2022, and boosted their average growth rate by almost 5 percentage points, thanks, in no small part, to more than 75% of the firms reporting double-digit expansion.

Top Firms: The Midwest

Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota

Total revenue: $1,523.81 million Average firm growth: 15.04%

Making major gains in average firm growth rate — it was just below 10% in 2021— the Midwest nonetheless was one of the few regions to report less total revenue, thanks to league-leading BKD leaving the roster when it became a national firm by merging with the Southeast’s Dixon Hughes Goodman to form a new national firm, Forvis.

Combined 2022 firm revenues

Top Firms: The Mountain Region

Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Utah and Wyoming

Total revenue: $357.79 million Average firm growth: 12.56%

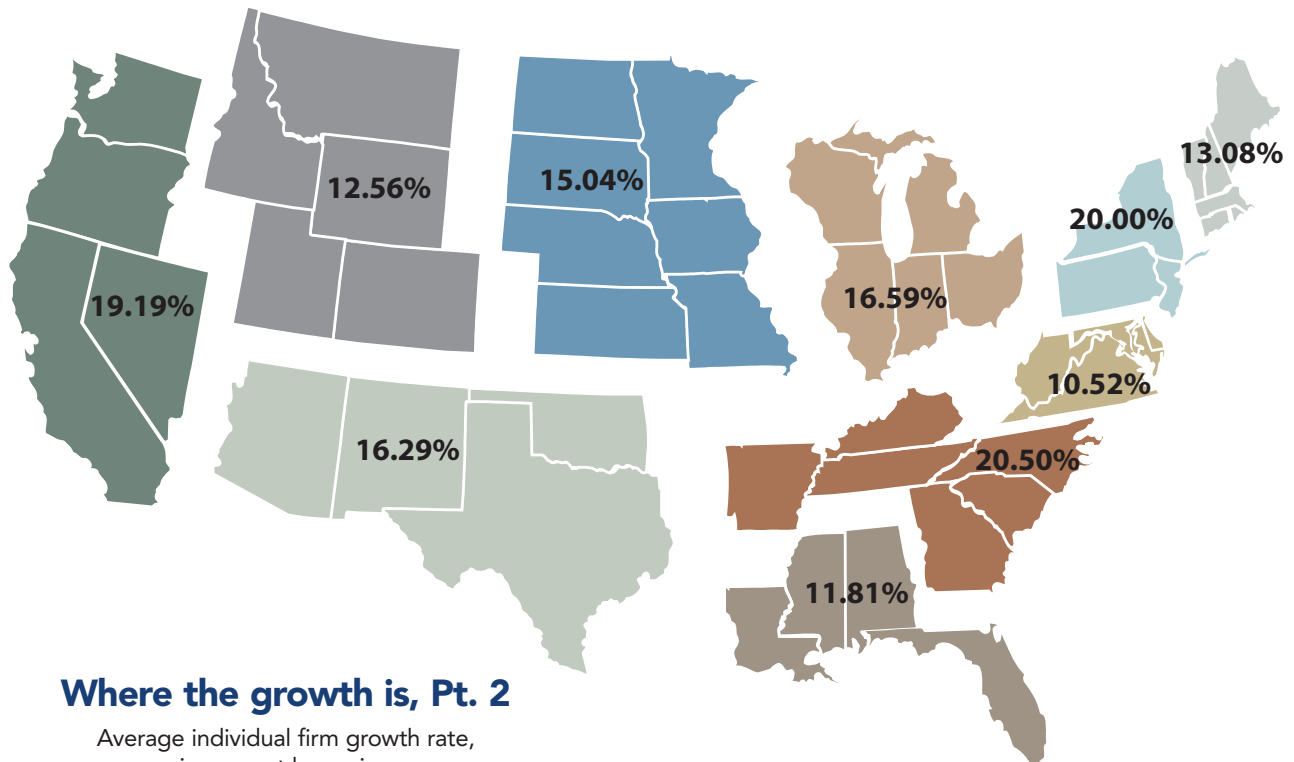

The smallest of the regions in terms of combined revenue, it seems to produce a disproportionate number of new members of the Top 100, sending up Richey May this year after promoting Haynie & Co. last year. At the same time, it lost longtime regular Anderson ZurMuehlen to a merger with list-leader Pinion.

Top Firms: The Southwest

Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas

Total revenue: $887.78 million      Average firm growth: 16.29%

The region boasted much higher total revenue (up more than $100 million) and a higher average firm growth rate (up almost 4 percentage points from 12.58%), thanks to strong performances at firms of all sizes, like EEPB Co. and MaloneBailey, which were among the fastest growing practices in the whole country.

Where the growth moved

Average individual firm growth rate, in percent by region, 2022 versus 2021

Top Firms: The West

California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington

Total revenue: $3,719.07 million      Average firm growth: 19.19%

Once again, the Regional Leaders in the West put in a strong performance, with the third highest average firm growth rate of all the regions, and a major jump in overall revenue — up over $700 million from last year. Fewer firms dropped out of the roster due to M&A than in some other regions, but that doesn't mean there weren't big moves: Three of this year's new Top 100 Firms came from the West (GHJ, Windes and Sensiba San Filippo), and fully 75% of firms in the West reported double-digit growth.
